NEW MERRY NEWS & TIDINGS of The RENAISSANCE CENTRE

The Faire is sponsoring the Renaissance Centre through part of the ticket admissions to the Faire, with the Centre providing lively and authentic Medieval-Renaissance entertainments.

HAIL THE NEW WAGON

An elaborate and authentic new Commedia dell'Arte players wagon, large enough to support the lively antics of a Commedia troupe, has been designed and built for the Centre under the direction of Clare Zero. The pageant wagon, resplendent in its rustick, wooden glory, made its debut at the Southern Faire in May. It will be used as a mobile stage by the new TRAVELLING FAIRE, a spirited sampling of Renaissance entertainments which will tour schools, parks and campuses.

GRANTS & GIFTS

Lo! Many things have come to pass since the Renaissance Centre was founded in 1968. The energies of the Golden Age are reaching far and wide, giving grants of coin to various worthy groups and activities throughout the realm. Since the last Spring Faire, the list has continued to grow:

SHAWNS & SACKBUTTS and other ancient instruments are being purchased by the Renaissance Centre to be used on loan to the Consortium Antiquum in Berkeley. The Centre brought the Consortium to the Faire each week-end in May.

FOSTERING RESEARCH IN THE PERIOD, the Renaissance Centre is sponsoring a study of Renaissance Dance, conducted by the Consortium Antiquum, from hitherto untranslated sources.

THAT THEY MAY PLAY, lutes have been provided for students working with the Lute Society of America in Santa Monica.

NEW MERRY MASQUERS, a Commedia troupe produced by the Renaissance Centre last summer and directed by Jerry Harper, travelled throughout East Los Angeles parks under the co-sponsorship of the L.A. County Parks and Recreation Dept. Further appearances of the Commedia Troupe will resume soon, with the new players cart.

INTO THE COFFERS --- of other organizations perpetuating the Renaissance arts went several recent donations or $200.00 each -- they include the New York Pro Musica; Lute Society of America; Shakespeare

SKETCH OF THE PROPOSED OLD ENGLISH VILLAGE AND RENAISSANCE CENTRE IN MARIN

Festival Theatre in Ashland, Oregon; Center for Medieval and Renaissance Studies at UCLA; San Diego National Shakespeare Festival; The Shakespeare Society of Los Angeles, Southern and Northern California chapters of the Recorder Society, and the Marin Shakespeare Festival.

CRAFTSMEN AND SCHOLARS whose work merits support have been given grants-in-aid by the Renaissance Centre. Charles Fisher is studying advanced recorder and instrument making in Brookline, Mass.; sculptor-ceramist Jim Rumph is producing his works again since the Centre replaced the kiln and wheel washed away in the Topanga floods.

ROUND & ROUND & ROUNDLY-O!

From the scribes and printers of the Renaissance Centre has come a new educational guide for classroom teachers: THE ROUNDABOUT. Distributed free o' charge, the Roundabout contains ideas for bringing the Faire concept to life in the classroom, and for involving students in the Olde English Faire before their visits in Springtime and Harvesttime. - send for a free copy.

ITEM. Money thus far received from Renaissance Centre Associate Memberships is being used for grants and school programs. As the Renaissance Centre progresses there will be a complete program of memberships and membership privileges. In the meantime, please join with the knowledge that your support is helping to bring the Centre into more immediate reality.

The Progresse of ELIZABETH

by Carol La Fleur

In each summer of her reign Elizabeth I, most gracious Queen of all England, would go on Progresse throughout some part of her fair land. The reasons for the progresse were threefold: It was necessary for Her Majesty and Her Court to leave the palace periodically in order that it might be aired and freshened; second, the economy-minded Queen, by spending a few months of each year as a guest of various of Her subjects, was able to save the Crown immeasurable expense; and third (and possibly the most important) the Summer Progresse allowed the Queen to see and be seen by Her subjects. The love-affair between Elizabeth and the people of England was constant and on-going . . . the reasons for which were readily apparent. She had assiduously kept the country out of war as long as possible, thus giving the depleted Treasury a chance to become strong. She enthusiastically encouraged the economic growth of all members of society. She was an active proponent of justice tempered with mercy (though the Irish would not agree). England prospered under the Queen's love, and she in turn drew her strength from the love of her people.

Elizabeth I enjoyed being surrounded by sumptuousness and beauty. Her travelling equipage equalled her permanent residences in splendour. All receptions and entertainments provided by peer and peasant alike endeavored each to surpass the other in pleasing the Queen.

When Her Majesty travelled by water, she was conveyed by Royal Barge, where, in the glassed-in, gilded cabin, furniture of exquisite beauty rested upon gold-embroidered red velvet rugs, and musicians customarily serenaded her. Land travel was effected, for processions, in carriages remarkable for their luxury if not for comfort: coaches of vermilion and gold; chariots open on all sides, canopied with a gilded crown and drawn by six gray horses, manes and tails dyed orange, bridled with pearls and hung with diamonds. When on progresse, the Queen frequently rode horseback for long periods of time, enjoying to ride as fast as the animal would go, thereby terrifying the Master of the Horse responsible for her safety. She frequently hunted for deer along the way, which meant shooting with bow and arrow from horseback.

As fanfare to her reign, after her coronation, Elizabeth was presented to the people with trumpets sounding, pipes and drums playing, organ pealing, and bells ringing. This was to be a portent of the celebration which would meet the Queen on every progresse. On one average progresse, "guns discharged in unison, life and drums sounded, banners were raised, garlands of fruit and flowers were hung overhead, sweet straws and velvets were spread beneath her feet; scented wax candles and flares illuminated the scene." The Queen's progresse frequently took her to Kenilworth where, on one occasion, the bridge leading to the castle was dressed with "seven pairs of columns adorned with votive offerings; wheat, grapes, branches laden with fruit, cages of birds, platters of fish protected by fresh grass; the sixth pair were in the form of two ragged staves, from whose branches hung glittering armour; the last pair were two bay trees, hung on all sides with lutes, viols, flutes, recorders and harps." To all the diversions in the open air, the bear-baiting, the fireworks, the tumblers, the rustic plays and the romantic, elegant entertainments with their exquisite accompaniments of music and dancing, the people of the district were allowed to come.

The Queen took constant delight in her people's festivals, masques and fairs.

*"Lord, Save our Gracious Soverign
ELIZABETH by Name,
That Long unto our comfort
She may both Rule and Reign!"*

Call O' The Faire Opening Proclamations

The Queen on Progresse To Pleasure Faire

Each day at noon, the Participants in Pleasure Faire go in procession to the Greenwood Theatre, where they hear their Lord Mayor proclaim the opening of the Faire, receive a Messenger from the Queen, welcome their fair Harvest Maid, and dance a sprightly dance to vanguish the villainous Hay Hag! The Market Bell rings, Faire officially commences. (See page 14)

Her Gracious Majesty Elizabeth I arrives at Pleasure Faire each Day at 3:00, to be Joyously greeted by Her grateful Subjects, and prevailed upon by them to rest and notice some slight entertainments prepared for Her kind Pleasure. She participates with interest in Judging the various crafts brought before the Gild Councill, and Presents Her token to the Craftsman judged Finest in his field. (For more information on the Queen's Progresse, see page 5.)

Court of Piepowders

Wherein, traditionally, Instant Justice is dispensed to right any wrongs to Travelers at the Faire. 3:30 Daily. (See page 15)

The Gild~Councill

The Master of the Gild-Councill is made known by the placing of a richly decorated garland upon his head. The Beadle plays at trying the garland on various heads, then discovers that it fits the head of the chosen Master. A Toast is then drunk to the new Officials. The Gild-Councill members oath of Office: "You shall swear that with all your might and power ye shall keep peace and tranquillity within your craft, and ye shall make good and true search in your craft during the year next ensuing."

CALL O' THE FAIRE

If you are in costume we welcome you to join the "Call O' The Faire" Procession, which Jogs its Deep and Merry Way past the Market Cross and up Spend Penny Lane to The Main Stage. At Pleasure Faire, this tradition is observed at High Noon each day.

The Lord Mayor, Sheriff, Bailiffs, Town Crier and Officials of the Faire lead the colourful opening procession, also called "Walking the Fair," to the sounding of horns and pipes.

As the procession reaches The Main Elizabethan Theatre, you are welcome to join in the festivities with shouts of "God Save the Queen," huzzahs for the Mayor, and peasant dancing following the loud proclamations and the ringing of the Market Bell.

Ye MARKET CROS

Note the Market Cros at Pleasure Faire, where travelers are invited to barter, proclaim, harangue or dance!

In very early England, public notices were posted here, penance was done here and punishments inflicted. Market Crosses were very often erected on boundary stones, which established markets and fairs as "neutral ground" where trade and festivity replaced inter-tribal fighting...if only for a few days.

SYMBOL O' THE GLOVE

Oyez! Oyez! Oyez! The Glove is Up! The Faire is Open! God Save the Queen!"

The Glove, a traditional part of old English fairs, symbolized the monarch's pledge to protect all who used the fair honestly and kept its peace. An old German custom, the gauntlet with signet ring was always Gilded and Garlanded and carried in the Grand Opening Procession of olde English fairs.

When the Lord Mayor reads the proclamation and calls out "The Glove is Up," he thus invites your cheers and the traditional throwing of pennies to the Glove.

SYMBOL of the RAM & GOBLET

Hermes, or Mercury as the patron of trade and public treaties, protector of travellers, god of boundaries and protector of thieves, is well suited to his role as guardian spirit of fairs and markets. The Ram and Goblet has become a symbol of English fairs because it was Hermes' symbol of sacrifice and religious ceremony... suggesting the more tribal origins of fairs and festivals.

COURT of the DUSTY FOOTED

Have you been swindled by a merchant? Offended by some churlish rogue? Robbed by a cut-purse? Then take your case to the Courte of the Dusty-Footed each day at 3:30 p.m. on The Main Stage.

To the old fairs came many wandering tradesmen, peddlers, travelers and entertainers. The Court of the Dusty-Footed or Court of Piepowder (a corruption of the Old French for peddler, pie poudre, was set up to settle disputes, where immediacy was required, before travellers moved on to the next village or fair. These courts were presided over by the holders of the fair charter and formalities were reduced to a minimum. In England, this instant legal remedy was common from Henry III's reign on.

TRADESMEN'S CRESTS

Over stalls of craftsmen hang symbols of their trade... a pot for a potter, a boot for a leather-smith, a pretzel for a baker. These colourful crests or banners had their practical purpose of telling the peasant by picture what he could not read by word. In very early days, only scholars and men of the church were able to read, and the printed book was still quite rare. By Elizabethan times, however, reading became a great pastime and books were widely available with the advent of the printing press.

And note the craftsmen "hawking" or "crying" their wares to the crowds. This early form of advertising was as prone to overstatement as advertising claims of today. So you're invited to answer the merchants' claims with haggling.

A HISTORIE O' ENGLISH FAIRS

Which came first, the fair or the festival? There probably is no answer to this riddle. The dating of fairs and festivals was usually related to the working seasons of the year. However, in prehistoric times, whenever traders arrived from distant lands a fair and celebration always took place. And whenever merchants and traders met where their routes crossed, fairs soon blossomed. The "neutral ground" of hostile tribes trading at markets and fairs later gave way to the marketplace as towns grew up around these common meeting and trading places. The great seasonal fairs, mostly spring and autumn, were the festive social events of the year until Oliver Cromwell closed the fairs in the mid-seventeenth century. They were to be revived, but never with the same flavor that marked their unbroken tradition.

The Faire Tale

Amid all that Surrounds us as 20th Century necessity, an age old necessity within all of us awaits its chance to live again... a time for festive Celebration; a time when "the Pleasures of nature and the naturalness of pleasure" set the spirit free...if only for a day.

In the pleasure fairs of Medieval and Renaissance England, travelling merchants, minstrels and mummers met buyers and revelers in annual festive mood at crossroads or in green fields. In these brief but rich remembered days, mirth as well as merchandise was traded.

The Renaissance Pleasure Faire re-creates annually those sights & sounds and, most important of all, the Spirit of those ancient, Merry Holidays. In costume of the times, come troubadours, Morris Dancers, Mummers, magicians, sorcerers, players of ancient instruments and players of the play, strolling minstrels, Jesters and Jugglers, pipers and puppeteers, tumblers & Commedia dell'arte players from homes, universities, high schools and theatre groups all over California.

"Oyez, Oyez, Oyez! Now hear the Call of the Faire... The Glove is Up an' Pleasure Faire is Come to Town!"

The Art of hand-crafted wares, so much a part of the pride & discovery of those ages, is also re-created at the Pleasure Faire. And, again, from all parts of California come makers of fine jewelry & lusters, carvers of wood, potters, weavers & spinners, flag makers, mapmakers, artisans of stained glass, icons and batik, iron-mongers, flowermongers, candlemakers, purveyors of spices & pommanders, Alchemists, herbists & apothecaries... all hawking loudly their goods and services from their colorful, rustic self-made stalls.

"Many a pound a penny told... many a bargain bought and sold."

And to complete the atmosphere of these merry days... foodmongers, purveyors of cheeses, roast beef & fowl, piemen and pitchmen of sausages and sweetmeats, vendors of fruits and tarts, juices and gingerbread. In the Ale Garden, kegs of wine and beer & bottle-ale quench the travelers' thirst.

"Oh, masters all do you beware of kissing girls at the pleasure faire."

Throughout the Pleasure Faire, for its few, special days each year, this rich satisfaction of real celebration lives once more. The feeling of heightened awareness of our relationship with nature... The rare joy of buying something hand-made from its maker... The involvement of the children with their peers in pleasant revelry... Such are the pleasures of the Pleasure Faire.

"It's I hev been to pleasure faire, an' oh, what sights did I see there!"

The Renaissance Pleasure Faire was conceived and created in 1963 by Ron & Phyllis Patterson of Los Angeles. It was originally designed to be a medieval children's fair as a unique background for a Commedia dell'Arte performance by the Piccolo Playmakers, a children's improvisational theatre group directed by Phyllis Patterson. The idea soon took on more spectacular dimension as research unfolded the color and diversity possible. The Faire takes place in September in Marin County, north of San Francisco, and in the Los Angeles area each May. As THEME EVENTS, formed in 1967, the Pattersons create and produce other unusual events, such as Fantasma alla Fellini, Alphabet Events & The Pataphysical Circus.

FILM RIGHTS RESERVED. Commercial film rights with respect to the Renaissance Pleasure Faire are expressly reserved. Commercial use of photographs or movies of the Faire without express written consent of Faire Management prohibited.

Increase thy pleasure at Pleasure Faire. Do-it-thyself: Make for yourself a simple Medieval or Renaissance Costume to wear to the Faire.
